ADA event notes 34 years of progress — and stagnation

'We have a shockingly long way to go'

The adoption of the Americans with Disabilities Act 34 years ago was the start of improvement, but not the end, Cortland County's leading advocate said as she discussed its upcoming celebration.

"This is a landmark piece of legislation that allows people like me to live independent lives," said Alex Mikowski, Access to Independence's executive director. "Before the ADA someone in a wheelchair was denied access."

WHERE: Suggett Park, Cortland
WHY: Acknowledgement of the 34th anniversary of the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act

Access to Independence will host its annual ADA Celebration 1 to 3:30 p.m. July 26 at Suggett Park in Cortland.

"This day is all about reflecting and building upon the work done, and seeing we have a shockingly long way to go," Mikowski said.

Free ice cream goes to the first 100 participants, who can pick up a craft activity as they pass the tables of the agencies and nonprofits, Mikowski said.

Access to Independence works to make public and private infrastructure more accessible, navigable and less hazardous. To that end, it recently got a $2,500 grant to improve adaptive technology at rural voting sites.

"If you need a ballot read to you and a site has one machine, that could take maybe 20 minutes," Mikowski said, delaying other voters.

Polling sites must meet basic requirements, like level doorways to allow

City seeks $675K for 2nd phase of Randall Park work

By JACK LAKOWSKY

A pair of pickleballers whacked a ball back and forth Wednesday afternoon at Randall Park in Cortland, working up sweats in the humidity.

The pickleball courts, which opened last week, have been used well, their opening well-attended and enthusiastically welcomed, city officials say. Renovating the bathrooms is next, and Cortland's Common Council voted unanimously Tuesday to seek a grant for them.

Youth Bureau Director Andrea Piedigrossi said pickleballers have been some of the loudest proponents of the ongoing Randall Park Improvement Project, which included the pickleball courts.

"They've been busy every day," Piedigrossi said Wednesday. Pickleballer ages vary widely, from a 6-year-old to a 90-year-old.

But if you play a long enough game, you might need the toilet. And the one at Randall Park needs a makeover, city officials say. Dents pock the door, its paint peeled. The drinking fountain sports a crust of lime and the whole place smells like mildew.

To fix up the restrooms and a host of other improvements, the city needs a $675,000 grant from the state, which comes with at least a 25% match — about $170,000.

The city of Cortland wants to renovate the bathroom facility as part of Phase 2 of the Randall Park Improvement project, Piedigrossi said Wednesday, especially to make it more Americans with Disabilities Act compliant.

"Once the bathroom's done, I'd say we're about 40% through," Piedigrossi said.

The city can defray costs by doing work itself, including helping remove the building, installing some plumbing and electrical, she said. "We have great guys on our DPW staff that can tackle that work."

Ahead, large price tags still loom. Piedigrossi said the city might add indoor lacrosse to the park, priced about $350,000 in 2022.

"Lighting for the softball field was about $180,000," Piedigrossi said. "I believe the pickleball court lights were about $80,000."

Prices for new playground equipment vary greatly depending on what you get, she said.

Also, the city has to work with the city school district to replace the playground equipment. Randall Middle School's playground is next to the city park.

When and if the city takes these next steps depends on available grants, the director said.

"Money is a factor, but the sky's the limit," Piedigrossi said. "If we think we can achieve it, we'll go for it."

Garner honored on 10th anniversary of chokehold death

By KAREN MATTHEWS and CEDAR ATTANASIO
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ten years after Eric Garner's death at the hands of New York City police officers made "I can't breathe" a rallying cry, loved ones on Wednesday remembered his life and legacy.

"I want people to remember him and remember that he was the one that helped get laws changed, that helped implement laws, who was the sacrificial lamb and that, because of him, others have benefited," said Gwen Carr, Garner's mother, at the start of a march on Staten Island, the borough where her son died.

A few dozen Garner family members, friends, and activist supporters marched to a park that sits between the sidewalk and a street that now bears his name — Eric Garner Way. As thousands of protesters have done over the past decade, they repeated some of his last words: "I can't breathe."

Bystander video showed Garner gasping the phrase on July 17, 2014, while locked in a police chokehold. The recording spurred Black Lives Matter protests in New York and across the country. More demonstrations followed weeks later when Michael Brown, an 18-year-old Black man, was fatally shot by a police officer in Ferguson, Missouri, on Aug. 9, 2014.

Six years later, George Floyd was recorded uttering the exact same words as he begged for air while a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck, killing him and sparking a new wave of mass protests.

Carr noted that since her son's death, there has been an increase in the use of video cameras by police. In 2020, New York lawmakers passed the Eric Garner Anti-Chokehold Act, which removed legal ambiguities in official police conduct by creating a felony crime of strangulation by peace officers that causes injury or death. Officer Daniel Pantaleo, who restrained Garner, was fired in 2019, but never charged with a crime.

A decade after Garner's death, Carr remembers his love of Christmas, regrets times she'd yelled at him, and said she has days when she can't find the strength to get out of bed. At the park on Wednesday, Carr and her family — including some of Garner's children — enjoyed a cookout as people from around the neighborhood gathered in a blocked-off street

Three days after attempted assassination, Trump shooter remains an elusive enigma

BETHEL PARK, Pa. — After three days, an enigmatic portrait emerged of the 20-year-old man who came close to killing former President Donald Trump with a high-velocity bullet: He was an intelligent loner with few friends, an apparently thin social media footprint and no hints of strong political beliefs that would suggest a motive for an attempted assassination.

Even after the FBI cracked into Thomas Matthew Crooks' cellphone, scoured his computer, home and car, and interviewed more than 100 people, the mystery of why he opened fire on Trump's rally Saturday, wounding the GOP nominee, remained as elusive as the moment it happened.

"He sat by himself, didn't talk to anyone, didn't even try to make conversation," said 17-year-old Liam Campbell, echoing the comments of classmates who remembered the shooter in this quiet community outside of Pittsburgh. "He was an odd kid," but nothing about him seemed dangerous, he added. "Just a normal person who seemed like he didn't like talking to people."

So far, there has been no public disclosure the shooter left any writings, suicide note, social media screed or any other indicator explaining his reasons for targeting Trump. A law enforcement official briefed on the ongoing investigation told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that Crooks' phone had not immediately yielded any meaningful clues related to motive, or whether he acted alone or with others.

Crooks' political leanings were also murky. Crooks was registered as a Republican in Pennsylvania, but federal campaign finance reports also show he gave $15 to a progressive political action committee on Jan. 20, 2021, the day Democratic President Joe Biden was sworn

Dems consider expelling Menendez from Senate after bribe conviction

By STEPHEN GROVES
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. Bob Menendez has shown no sign he will voluntarily resign from the Senate following his conviction on bribery charges, leaving Democratic senators contemplating an expulsion effort to force him from office.

While Menendez, a New Jersey Democrat, has six months remaining in his term, Democrats have made clear they don't want him in office any longer. Within minutes of the guilty verdict on Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer called for his resignation and New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy, who would name Menendez's replacement, said that the Senate should expel Menendez if he refused to step down.

Expulsion, which requires a two-thirds majority, is an exceedingly rare step in the Senate.

The last time it was even seriously considered by the chamber was almost 30 years ago, and only 15 senators — almost all during the Civil War — have ever been expelled.

Still, senators are preparing to make the push.

"He must stand up now and leave the Senate. He must do that, and if he refuses to do that, many of us, but I will lead that effort to make sure he is removed from the Senate," Sen. Cory Booker, New Jersey's other Democratic senator, told MSNBC late Tuesday. "That is the right thing to do. That is the just thing to do."

Sen. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., leaves federal court following the day's proceedings in his bribery trial, Tuesday, in New York.

After a jury found Menendez, 70, guilty of accepting bribes of gold and cash from three New Jersey businessmen and acting as a foreign agent for the Egyptian government, the senator did not comment on his political plans in brief remarks as he left the courthouse. But he vowed to appeal the verdict.

"I have never violated my public oath. I have never been anything but a patriot of my country and for my country," Menendez told reporters.

It was a familiar refrain from Menendez, who has taken a defiant stand ever since he was first indicted in September last year.

While under indictment, Menendez stepped down as chair of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, but continued to attend classified briefings — a move that irked his fellow senators.

And while they mostly ostracized him in the day-to-day workings of the Senate and over half of the Senate Democratic caucus called for his resignation, there was little they could do to force him from office, especially when Schumer maintained that Menendez should get his day in court.

Now that Schumer has urged Menendez to resign, there will be a concerted effort to put as much pressure as possible on Menendez to voluntarily step aside. That started Tuesday as the Senate Ethics Committee released a statement saying that it would "promptly" complete an investigation into Menendez that started when he was first indicted. The committee also made it clear that recommending expulsion to the Senate was on the table.

In the meantime, any individual senator could move to hold a snap vote on expulsion for Menendez, though that effort could be blocked by an objection from any other senator — including Menendez himself.

That means that many in the Senate will likely wait for the ethics committee to release its recommendation.

In the past, an expulsion recommendation from the panel has been enough for disgraced senators to voluntarily resign. In 1982, the panel recommended that former Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr., a New Jersey Democrat, be expelled and he resigned before it went to a vote in the full Senate. In 1995, Sen. Robert W. Packwood, an Oregon Republican, announced he would resign just a day after the committee released its recommendation.

Alligator's owner sues NY agency to get pet back

By CAROLYN THOMPSON
 Associated Press

BUFFALO — An upstate New York man whose 750-pound alligator was seized is suing the state Department of Environmental Conservation in an effort to get him back, saying the agency was wrong not to renew a license for the pet he looked after for more than 30 years.

Conservation officers entered Tony Cavallaro's home in the Buffalo suburb of Hamburg in March, sedated the 11-foot alligator named Albert, taped his mouth shut and drove off with him, saying Cavallaro's license to keep the reptile expired in 2021 and hadn't been renewed.

In his lawsuit filed with the state Supreme Court, Cavallaro says the agency's denial of his license wasn't "factually based," his attorney, Peter Kooshoian, said Tuesday.

"We're hoping that he will get his license to have the animal reinstated, and from there we'd like to either negotiate or litigate to have the animal brought back to Mr. Cavallaro because we feel that he should have had a valid license at the time, as he'd had for the last 30 years," Kooshoian said.

The DEC does not comment on pending litigation, a spokesman said via email when asked for a response to the claims. It previously said Albert's enclosure didn't sufficiently ensure that he would not come into contact with people, and that the alligator was afflicted by "blindness in both eyes and spinal complications" — conditions Cavallaro disputes.

Officers' seizure of the alligator, caught on video, and Cavallaro's videos and photos of him petting and kissing Albert in the custom indoor pool he built led to an outpouring of support for the duo. "Bring Albert Home" signs still dot some neighborhood lawns and more than 4,500 followers keep up with Cavallaro's efforts on Facebook.

"I'm hoping we get this thing resolved. That's all I can do," Cavallaro said of the decision to sue. "It's overwhelming me."

Cavallaro bought the American alligator at an Ohio reptile show in 1990 when Albert was two months old. He considers him an emotional support animal and "gentle giant."

Bike rodeo to teach road, bike safety to children

McGraw Lions Club to sponsor event for first time

By MARGARET MELLOTT
Staff Reporter

mmellott@cortlandstandard.com
Step one: Helmet — check. Step two: Bike — check. Step three: Learn the hand signs for safe biking on the road. Then, hit the course.

The McGraw Lions Club, which does community service, along with the Cortland County Health Department and county Youth Bureau will host a bike rodeo from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at the County Office Building, 60 Central Ave., Cortland.

The city of Cortland Police Department, city Youth Bureau and Action Sports, a bicycle shop in Cortland, will also help with the event, which is meant for children ages 5 to 12 and their families. Parents must sign in with their child upon arrival.

"We're hoping for 20 to 25 (participants)," said Sharon McNeil, McGraw Lions Club bike rodeo committee chair. "The way we look at it, those are 20 to 25 kids that have something to do on a weekend and learning about how to be safe and ride that bike through the streets so your parents don't worry."

Before children start the course, their helmets will be checked and fitted, using the 2-V-1 method: two fingers should fit between the eyebrows and bottom of the helmet, the side straps should form a V below the ears and only one finger should fit between the chin and the strap. If a helmet is too damaged, kids will be given a new one. The helmets, which are in limited supply, are sponsored by the Governor's Traffic and Safety Committee and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"We educate on the proper fit of the helmet," said ReBecca Main, Cortland County public health programs manager and Youth Bureau director. "These children are wearing helmets, but they're (improperly fit helmets) going to fall off their heads and their heads are going to smash, even if the helmet stays on."

For the bike safety check, Main uses the ABC method: air, brakes and chains. Is there enough air in the tires? Are the brakes fully functional? Are the chains oiled?

The event will also give away about 20 water bottles with free books from the Dolly Parton Imagination Library at the Cortland Free Library and on-site vision screening — these extras come from the efforts of the Mc-Graw Lions Club.

This is the club's first time hosting a bike rodeo, but President Mary Clancy Talbot, said it aligns well with its mission.

"Our main goal, for the past 20 years that I know, has been vision," Clancy Talbot said. "Our main mission has been vision screening. We do vision screening at all the schools, the local schools, every fall."

Children who don't pass the screening will be advised to visit an eye doctor for further testing. For parents unable to afford the cost of prescription glasses, the McGraw Lions Club has provided financial assistance. The club has helped 30 children get glasses, Clancy Talbot said.

The club has five objectives:

Vision and eye-care services.

Diabetes, both Type 1 and Type 2, services.

Preventing hunger.

Protecting the environment.

Childhood cancer research and services.

"Those are our five pillars, but we're not limited to that," said Maureen McDermott-Mulherin, club secretary.

"Those five pillars, it's just community service," McNeil said. "It's just things to help the community, like the bike rodeo."

The Cortland Fire Department's older, secondary ladder truck, seen here after some cleaning Monday, is years overdue for replacement. A closer look reveals rust and other wear.

City seeks grant for new fire trucks

Ladder is 30 years old; other vehicle faces retirement in 6 years

By JACK LAKOWSKY
Staff Reporter

jlakowsky@cortlandstandard.com

The city of Cortland Fire Department's back-up ladder truck, the larger type of fire-fighting apparatus, will mark its 30th anniversary with Cortland next year.

Time to retire, officials say.

To pay for a new $1.2 million ladder truck the Cortland Common Council unanimously authorized an application Tuesday for $1 million from the Small Cities Community Development Block Grant Facilities Program. If it gets the money, the city would cover the remaining $200,000.

"Some real tough math here," Mayor Scott Steve said in the council's meeting Tuesday.

While the ladder truck works fine, department officials said, it's well past due for replacement, acquired by the department from Ithaca in 1995.

The city also seeks to start putting money toward replacing one of its smaller fire engines, called a pumper, without a ladder. Ordering the truck early allows the city to avoid inflation, and the city will likely bond for the money, Steve said Wednesday.

In all, the two trucks will cost about $2.9 million.

"This would put us on a good trajectory, once we did that, if we spread it out over five years," Steve said. "Buy the ladder truck now, and spread out the second one afterwards, it would put us on a good trajectory to maintain a good plan again and not be stuck in a crisis where we're spending a lot of money getting vehicles fixed."

"It's getting harder to find parts for it," Fire Chief Wayne Friedman said of the ladder truck Tuesday, and at a certain point, parts will be impossible to find.

"We'd like to be ahead of the game instead of behind," Friedman said. That's why the department, and the city, are beginning to get into a long-term plan of regular equipment replacement.

Once, Friedman said, when the department acquired a piece of equipment, a truck or ladder or engine, it kept the vehicle in service until it just couldn't be serviced, anymore. But when that happens, the vehicle has no resale value and the city may not have prepared or saved for the new purchase.

The city is now moving into that long-term planning, Friedman said. Engines and trucks might have an expected 20-year-life span. A ladder similar to what he seeks might last 30 years, which is the situation he's in now.

"That's 30 years old and the service life should be no more than that," Friedman said.

Alderson Seth Thompson (D-5th Ward) said he wanted to see a plan of how the city would cover costs beyond the grant, for transparency's sake. He said the city should do all it can to prevent grant funding from eating into operational funds.

Department Deputy Chief Derek Reynolds said the department developed a comprehensive plan expecting the department to replace a piece of apparatus every five years or so. Reynolds said the department bought the ladder truck for $10,000. It's now spending $20,000 a year just to keep it certified.

The other, smaller engine is due for replacement in 2030, Reynolds said.

"We're trying to offset these things a little bit," Reynolds said. "As far as where to come up with the money, we're doing everything we can, grant funding and things like that."

Cortland YMCA receives support from Ithaca Y

By LILY BYRNE
Staff Reporter

lbyrne@cortlandstandard.com

The Cortland YMCA is receiving help from the YMCA of Ithaca and Tompkins County, and even they don't know if it's permanent.

Two years ago, the Cortland YMCA CEO left, and the board entered into a management agreement with the Central New York YMCAs, which has now ended, said Senior Program Director Gina Cusano-McLaughlin.

"It's not technically a management agreement with Ithaca," Cusano-McLaughlin said this week. "It's them coming over to help us really get back on our feet, get more members in the building and be more of the community staple that this once was."

"This partnership will serve to provide CEO support according to Y-USA guidelines to the Cortland YMCA as it continues to serve its community," a news release from the Ithaca YMCA says. "The Ithaca YMCA will also provide guidance and assist with grant opportunities, philanthropy, and membership growth initiatives."

The only difference members will notice is seeing two new faces around the Cortland YMCA: Christie Thornton, CEO of the YMCA of Ithaca and Tompkins County, and Director of Operations and Development Gunnar Madison.

"They're going to be working behind the scenes with human resources, and making sure bills are streamlined and things are paid timely," Cusano-McLaughlin said.

The end goals of the Cortland YMCA are more aligned with the goals of the Ithaca YMCA, she said.

"It was the result of our needs being better determined, but not being met," she said.

"Cortland is a very small town," she said. "Ithaca seems a little bit bigger, but Tompkins County as a whole seems to be more parallel with Cortland. The Ithaca Y has a better understanding of that, more so than the Central Ys do. We are a small town community YMCA, Ithaca is a small town community YMCA. The YMCAs of Central New York are not."

"We are looking forward to developing a closer working relationship with the Ithaca YMCA," said Adam Clifford, board president for the Cortland YMCA, in a release. "Their growth over the past few years is inspiring. We think they will bring great ideas to the Cortland Y and can do a lot to help mentor our staff."

"The Y alliance does require every Y to have a CEO, and we have been without a CEO since October of 2022," Cusano-McLaughlin said. "Now, we are in a six-month agreement with them to then reevaluate. If it ends up being permanent, then by the Y alliance standards, we have to liquidate and be absorbed by Ithaca, so then it would be the Tompkins and Cortland Community YMCAs."

In other news, the Cortland YMCA sold the building next door to it, which was previously purchased to be knocked down to expand the building, add more parking or create an after-school program, Cusano-McLaughlin said.

It still owns the 186-187 Homer Ave. shopping center, which houses Dollar General and Cortland Re-Use.

There were plans to develop the site years ago for a new YMCA facility, but those fell through.

Cortland Fire Dept. gets $50K for new hoses

The City of Cortland Fire Department can now replace its hoses, the oldest of which was bought in 1989, with a $50,000 Assistance to Firefighters Grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

These are hoses the department uses to bring water from hydrant to fire truck, or from truck to truck, Deputy Chief Derek Reynolds said in a news release.

The department loses five lengths of hose a year because they fail to meet pressure standards, Reynolds said.

"With financial support, the department will be able to invest in supply/attack, large-diameter hoses that can withstand twice the pressure of the current ones," Reynolds said. "This significant upgrade not only provides firefighters with a tactical advantage, but also significantly enhances their safety during future operations."

Reynolds said the department will sell the replaced hose at auction, an effort to offset the city's $2,500 match for the grant.

State funds bridge, culvert replacement

The state will fund more than $9.2 million in bridge and culvert work in the greater Cortland area through its BRIDGE-NY initiative, Gov. Kathy Hochul announced July 11 and state Sen. Lea Webb (D-Binghamton) announced Wednesday.

The work is part of $23 million in her district, which includes Broome and Tompkins counties.

"By enabling counties to address these vital needs and avoid project delays; we can contain costs and save taxpayers money," Webb said in a release.

These projects were funded: $2.38 million to Cortland County to replace Pine Hill Road bridge over Hunts Creek.

$1.5 million to Cortland County to replace a Cold Brook Road culvert carrying Cold Brook Creek.

$2.49 million to Cortlandville to replace Hoxie Gorge Road bridge over Hoxie Creek.

$1.5 million to Preble to replace a Currie Road culvert carrying West Branch Toughnioga River.

$1.33 million to the village of Dryden to replace a Union Street culvert.

Tompkins begins search for new admin.

Tompkins County has begun the search for its next administrator, the county's chief executive, who will succeed Lisa Holmes, who plans to retire at the end of the year. The Tompkins County Legislature seeks candidates with eight to 10 years of administrative and management experience, who are consensus-builders, strategic thinkers, and good communicators. The administrator works with county employees, elected officials, community organizations and the public. The job pays $180,000 a year. Tompkins County has hired Goodwin Recruiting to assist with the search.

"We're looking for candidates who are eager to continue to leverage our new strategic operations plan to realize our vision of all Tompkins County residents thriving in a supportive, healthy, safe and inclusive environment," said Legislature Chair Dan Klein (D-Danby, Caroline, Ithaca).

Police/fire

Cortland PD issues scam warning

At least one Cortland resident received a call from someone falsely claiming to be an employee of the Cortland Police Department, asking for money in lieu of an arrest.

In a Facebook post Wednesday, Cortland police said the department will never request or demand any payment for such a reason.

"Please spread the word and do not fall victim to these types of schemes," police said.

Police recommend contacting the department about questionable calls like this and asking for a supervisor.

Society, 10:30 a.m., noon and 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

Opportunities for children to paint toy wooden boats, 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday, and a McClurg Kids Building Corner, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sunday.

Cornell

The Cornell Center for Historical Keyboards announces the return of the Forte/Piano Summer Academy with the Chamber Music Collective July 30 to Aug. 3 at Cornell University. The series will feature experts in 18th- and 19th-century music, culminating in a series of concerts, presentations and discussions.

"The main goal of the collaboration is for our students to get to know the expansive collection of instruments," said collective co-founder Sezi Seskir. "The concerts will include a variety of composers such as Joseph Bologne (Chevalier de Saint-Georges), Schubert, Brahms, Debussy, Emilie Mayer, and Louise Farrenc on an equally large range of instruments, from a five-octave Walter copy to original nineteenth-century Graf, Blüthner, and Pleyel pianos."

The CCHK also presents two Showcase Concerts from Tom Beghin (senior researcher at the Orpheus Institute for Advanced Studies & Research in Music) and Tuija Hakkila (piano faculty at the Sibelius Academy) to preview next summer's Forte/Piano 2025.

Arts off Main Festival Aug. 3

Art has a million definitions — many are what you do, not what you admire. A ton of them will be executed at Arts off Main this year, including splatter-paint, literature, puppetry and pottery.

The Arts off Main Festival, sponsored by Cortland Arts Connect, will be 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Aug. 3 on Court Street. Main Street to Church Street will be closed to vehicle traffic, said Carol Fitzgerald, executive director of Cortland Arts Connect.

Expect an art tent for kids, and more free workshops than ever, including wool felting, ceramic tile painting, wine glass dragonfly tea lights, watercolor painting and puppet-making.

Lily Gershon, owner of Lilypad Puppet Theatre, will perform a puppet show and then guide kids through making their own puppet. She pre-sews puppet bodies using donated fabric and recycled materials.

"They get a way to express themselves which is very important," Gershon said. "It is self-expression to create something that's your own invention. That something becomes alive — it's a puppet, so it has a personality."

"They can explore another side of themselves through a puppet," she added. "Their puppet can be just like them, but their puppet can also be the opposite of them. It can be a monster; maybe something that expresses a negative side, or something that they are angry about, or a side of themselves that isn't who they are, but a part of who they are."

She will wear her Idea Apron, which is covered in different puppets, to give kids ideas on how to create different hair and faces.

"They also get to do something that they just saw an adult professional do, and then they get to be invited to be a part of it," she said. "They can see that art is not just something that you watch and are a passive participant in, but art is something that you can get into, you can do it yourself right now."

Muralist Molly Reagan will lead a street chalk art session. Noel Passeri will offer free caricatures, and Maggie Phelps will offer henna tattoos, said artist and board member Emily Gibbons.

"Come on out to the festival to support our local and regional artists," Gibbons said. "Also, try your hand at creating art yourself."

Steve and Goldie Williams will have a booth for SPLAT! Sumthin', a splatter paint room opening in Cortland this month.

"It's a creative space where people throw, splatter and spray paint to create unique, abstract art," Steve Williams said. "It's a fun, liberating experience that encourages artistic expression without traditional constraints."

At the festival, people can wear protective gear and create spin art and pour art on T-shirts and canvases. It costs between $10 and $20.

"Paint is applied while the canvas spins, resulting in unique, centrifugal designs that are often vibrant and mesmerizing," he said. "Pour art, also known as acrylic pour painting, involves pouring layers of fluid acrylic paint onto a canvas to create swirling, marbled effects.

The paint flows and mixes in unpredictable ways, producing beautiful, one-of-a-kind pieces of art."

The festival's music schedule is as follows:

10 a.m. — Nan Pasquarello & Marina Gorelaya

10:50 a.m. — Bradford Allen

11:45 a.m. — The Ish

12:45 p.m. — Rick Starmer

1:45 p.m. — LilySilly Puppet Theater

2:30 p.m. — The High Road

3:30 p.m. — Local Farmers Union

4:20 p.m. — Colleen Kattau

Pasquarello and Gorelaya will open the festival with a flute and piano duet, said Monica Ryan, a Cortland Arts Connect board member.

"We will even have some literary things this year," Ryan said. "There will be a booth where you can make different kinds of poetry right there at the event."

An author's tent will sell local authors' books. More than 20 artisans will sell handmade art and products, including Press Gurwitz Perfumerie, wearable pressed flowers from Juni Dee Jewelry, beaded Mexican jewelry from La Flor LLC and home decor from The 1812 Shoppe.

The farmers market will also be open at the festival, selling produce, plants, baked goods and crafts.

"It's a great way to get the community together to experience all of the talent that we have here in Cortland, from the musical artists to the visual artists," Ryan said. "It's just a really great way to experience the talent here and also bring out your own."

Holiday in Homer to fill green Saturday

Expect more than 80 vendors selling arts, crafts, books — even dog treats. Look for the entertainment. And you might even find a few artists at Holiday in Homer Saturday.

The event is from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Village Green, where you can dunk a cop, listen to live music by Doc Weismore and Real Country, take a horse-drawn wagon ride and admire the quilts at the quilt show.

Artists taking part in the Center for the Arts of Homer's plein air contest may also be on the green, painting scenes. More than 25 artists have signed up to take part, although that two-day event encompasses a broader area. And while forecasting it might be a jinx, the National Weather Service in Binghamton expects sunny weather, with a high about 81 degrees.

Movie shot in Syracuse coming to theaters

By GEOFF HERBERT
syracuse.com (TNS)

A new movie starring "The Office" actor Rainn Wilson is finally coming to theaters three years after it was filmed in the Syracuse area.

"Empire Waist," a body-positive, coming-of-age comedy, will be released in theaters across the U.S. and Canada on Sept. 27, according to Deadline.

The cast includes Wilson and his "Galaxy Quest" co-star Misi Pyle, plus "SMILF" star Mia Kaplan.

The story follows Lenore Miller (Kaplan), an overweight, insecure teen whose talent for fashion is discovered by her confident, plus-sized classmate (newcomer Jemima Yevu).

Wilson will play Kaplan's supportive father and Pyle will play her image-conscious mother, raising the question of whether Lenore can feel the self-love she inspires in others.

"Empire Waist" is the first feature film for writer-director Claire Ayoub, whose script was on Hollywood's The Black List of top unproduced screenplays in 2019.

Ayoub wrote and directed her first play at age 14 and also wrote for Amy Poehler's "Smart Girls."

She said she used her 2014 personal essay, "Notes to My Twelve Year Old Self," as the inspiration for "Empire Waist."

While gas taxes can't pay for roads much longer, state lawmakers think Amazon deliveries might

By ALEX BROWN
Stateline.org (TNS)

For decades, states have relied on gas taxes to provide much of the money to maintain roads and bridges. But as cars become more fuel efficient, and some Americans switch to electric vehicles, state leaders say the gas tax won't pay the bills for much longer.

At the same time, many cities have seen their streets crowded with delivery trucks from Amazon and other companies, as consumers increasingly opt to have products delivered to their homes. In a few states, lawmakers think fees on those deliveries could be part of their road-funding solution.

"If you're going to be creating wear and tear on our roads, you should help pay to maintain them," said Colorado state Rep. Cathy Kipp, a Democrat who chairs the Energy and Environment Committee.

In July 2022, Colorado became the first state with a retail delivery fee, a charge on all vehicle deliveries to consumers within the state. The fee, which currently stands at 29 cents per delivery, provides funding for highways, bridges, tunnels, electric vehicle charging stations and projects to reduce air pollution and to electrify vehicle fleets and transit systems. It has brought in more than $160 million.

Colorado leaders have had to simplify the law to help businesses comply with it, but they say it's largely been a success story. Minnesota enacted its own retail delivery fee in 2023, and lawmakers in New York and Illinois have proposed similar measures. Meanwhile, legislators and transportation officials in several other states have commissioned studies to consider the concept.

Some retailers and Republican lawmakers have argued that the fee hurts consumers, and many businesses in Colorado initially had trouble complying with the law.

"The 27-cent delivery fee is not trivial, its effects are not imperceptible, and it greatly affects our citizens — especially those who are already struggling to pay the bills and provide for their families," Republican state Rep. Rose Pugliese, the House minority leader, wrote in a Colorado Springs Gazette guest column several months after the law was enacted.

But backers of the fee say they see growing interest across the country, especially as delivery trucks become ubiquitous in many neighborhoods.

'FUTURE-PROOFING' FUNDS

State law in Colorado limits the ways in which lawmakers can expand taxes. With gas tax revenues dwindling, legislators didn't have an obvious solution to pay for roads. They eventually settled on the retail delivery fee, which is not characterized as a tax.

Initially, the program was a struggle for many businesses, due to a requirement that they detail the fee separately on each receipt.

"For our medium and small businesses, it was a real complicated thing and very burdensome for them to have to reprogram their software with a whole extra line item," Kipp said.

Last year, Kipp joined a bipartisan group of lawmakers to amend the program. They rescinded the requirement that businesses itemize the fee on each receipt and allowed companies to cover the fee themselves rather than breaking it out on each order. They also exempted retailers with less than $500,000 in sales.

An Amazon Prime truck pulls away after a delivery in Washington, D.C., in 2022.

Since the fix was adopted, Kipp said she has stopped hearing complaints about the program. Chris Howes, president of the Colorado Retail Council, said he too has not heard any recent gripes.

"We've got it straightened out by now," he said. "People have accepted it and moved on."

Amazon did not grant a Stateline interview request, and the National Retail Federation deferred questions to state chapters. Chamber of Progress, a tech industry advocacy group, did not arrange an interview by publication time.

Last year, lawmakers in Minnesota enacted their own retail delivery fee, a 50-cent charge on purchases of more than $100. Lawmakers heard from local governments that they were struggling to maintain their roads and badly needed state aid to make up the gap.

"This is trying to future-proof our transportation funding," said Democratic state Rep. Erin Koegel, who sponsored the bill. "We keep getting performance grades from civil engineers saying we're at a C- or D for our infrastructure. We needed to think about ways to get more revenue in the system."

Koegel said the measure was a compromise. Her initial draft, which did not have a $100 threshold for purchases, was intended to be a deterrent, much like cigarette taxes. She said delivery trucks are increasing congestion in many cities and damaging streets that weren't built to support large vehicles. However, lawmakers ultimately decided to limit the fee to more expensive purchases in order to protect lower-income consumers.

Minnesota's fee is projected to generate $59 million in its first fiscal year. The funding will be distributed to cities, counties and towns to help with their road-funding needs.

TRAFFIC THROUGHOUT THE DAY

Cities and counties in Washington state also have asked for help, and some local leaders have asked state lawmakers to consider a retail delivery fee — or to authorize cities to collect one. State lawmakers commissioned an analysis, published last month, looking at the potential for such a program. The report found that a fee could generate $45 million to $112 million in revenue in 2026, depending on which businesses and orders were covered.

"We're now seeing that there's traffic on our system throughout the day, and the growth of these delivery services is a part of that," said Democratic state Sen. Marko Lias, who chairs the Transportation Committee. "We've had a history in transportation of user-based fees. This feels like a mechanism that could help in that regard."

Lias emphasized that some version of the fee is likely to be a big topic of discussion in the next legislative session. He said he's already heard strong arguments on both sides of the issue.

In some areas, the rise in retail deliveries has put the greatest burden on the infrastructure surrounding shipping facilities. Illinois' CenterPoint Intermodal Center, the nation's largest inland port, connects interstate trucking, railway lines and Mississippi River barges.

"There really needs to be a shift in the tax structure, since many of these facilities are not generating the local sales tax you'd get at a brick and mortar," said Democratic state Sen. Rachel Ventura, whose district includes the CenterPoint facility. "We have a lot of traffic going in and out, and the environmental burden and road repairs and the tax burden fall locally."

Ventura has drafted a bill that would allow communities to assess fees on intermodal facilities — locations that transfer products from one type of transportation to another. Local governments that opted in would be able to spend the funds on roads within five miles of the facilities. The fee, which would be based on the weight of each shipment, is projected to generate $33 million to $68 million per year.

The bill has not passed out of committee, and Ventura said lawmakers are still discussing the path forward amid opposition from the trucking industry.

In New York, a Democratic bill to impose a 25-cent fee on deliveries within New York City has been introduced but remains in committee. Meanwhile, state agencies in Nevada and Ohio have commissioned studies examining the feasibility of retail delivery fees. Those reports have not yet led to legislative action.

City fire station project

The ornate, 110-year-old Cortland fire station on Court Street with a bell tower and tiled roof stands in stark contrast to the bunker-like City Hall building next door that was constructed in the 1960s.

When the fire station was built on Court Street, fire trucks were small vehicles and the building was designed to accommodate them. Modern vehicles are much larger, and many do not fit in the station, despite many efforts over the years to beef up the floor to hold their weight. Those improvements still could not account for the dimensions of a modern truck, prompting the city to store some fire trucks at other sites.

The city has considered options for a new station, including an addition to the current one, several times over the years, including about 20 years ago. But none ever went anywhere, due to the complications of finding an adequate site downtown and the cost of such a project. Action could finally be coming as the city is once again considering options and is seeking designs for a fire station addition to resolve the building's lingering limitations.

The last significant movement toward an answer came when it purchased the former Ames Linen building in 2005 with such a project in mind when the company relocated to a much larger building at 67 Huntington St. in the city. Creating a parking lot on the site was considered a temporary arrangement at the time while construction options were considered.

The city has for decades had to custom-order some fire vehicles, making do with smaller ones than it would prefer. An aerial ladder truck cannot be housed in the building and is kept at a substation on South Franklin Street. The city-owned former New York state armory on Wheeler Avenue also houses some fire vehicles and equipment.

Any renovation to the Court Street station would be limited because of the historic status of the building.

Of course, the fire station is only one of many space issues that the city has on its plate.

Early in his first term of office, Mayor Scott Steve said he was pressing ahead with a space study for all property owned by the city. Many departments need additional or reconfigured spaces.

A plan years in the making to relocate City Court from the second floor of City Hall to the Cortland County Courthouse was recently thrown into disarray when the state decided to halt the project and use the Courthouse space for its own expanding purposes as two new courtrooms will be added. That leaves the city with a cramped City Hall.

While the main city fire station is an historic icon of the city, there is nothing that requires the city to continue to use the beautiful building for the same purpose. With a laundry list of space needs, and many questions still remaining about a fire department expansion project, the city should keep an open mind and consider alternate uses for the building, whether its own or selling it to a developer.

Smith-Corona plans to build a 40,000-square-foot addition to its parts fabrication plant at South Cortland in order to meet the increased demand for its typewriters. Construction is expected to start early this Fall and the new building will be in operation by next July.

Increased worldwide demand for Smith-Corona typewriters, particularly models featuring the Coronamatic cartridge ribbon, have overtaxed Smith-Corona's existing facilities in the Cortland-Groton area, L.G. Greis, General Manager, said. The expanded part fabrication will be used to increase production at Cortland and at other locations.

The money from Washington's landmark climate law will help tribes address rising seas, climate change

By GENE JOHNSON and HALLIE GOLDEN
Associated Press

SEATTLE — Tens of millions of dollars raised by a landmark climate law in Washington state will go to Native American tribes that are at risk from climate change and rising sea levels to help them move to higher ground, install solar panels, buy electric vehicles and restore wetlands, Gov. Jay Inslee announced Tuesday.

The money — $52 million — comes from the 2021 Climate Commitment Act, which auctions off allowances for heavily polluting companies to emit carbon, with the revenue invested in education, transportation and other programs. Conservative critics who blame it for increased gas prices are seeking to repeal the law in November.

Nearly every Native American tribe in Washington is receiving money. Among them is the 3,000-member Quinault Indian Nation on the Pacific coast of the Olympic Peninsula, which is getting $13 million to help relocate its two main villages to higher ground, away from the tsunami zone and persistent flooding. Part of one of the villages is below sea level, separated from the roaring ocean by a seawall, and high tides and storm surges have flooded homes and government buildings.

"The Quinault is a perfect example of two things: people who are threatened by climate change, and people who are willing to do something about it and are confident in our ability to do something about it," Inslee said. "So when I think about what you're doing, it's very inspirational to me."

The tribe has spent at least a decade on the relocation effort, but so far a patchwork of federal and state grants has fallen far short of the expected cost.

The money will help fund a new building to house child and elder services, an emergency shelter and a new water tank and pump house on high ground to serve residents, government buildings and a relocated public school. It will also help pay for the development of a master plan and architectural drawings for a new museum and cultural center.

"We are incredibly grateful for this funding allowing us to take a big step forward in our mission to get our people, our homes and our critical infrastructure out of harm's way," Quinault President Guy Capoe-man said in a statement issued by the state Commerce Department. "It will allow us to serve our elders and children, our most precious resource, in a safe space while providing an emergency shelter and operations base when we need to respond to inevitable flooding and other natural disasters that are part of life on the coast."

Inslee, a Democrat who is in his third and final term as governor, has frequently touted the Climate Commitment Act. Washington is in the process of connecting its carbon market with California and Quebec, which also have emission allowance auctions, but the law faces a ballot-box challenge in Initiative 2117, backed by conservative hedge fund executive Brian Heywood.

Inslee joined Capoe-man and Commerce Director Mike Fong for a news conference Tuesday in Taholah, one of the Quinault villages being relocated, to announce the grants.

Twenty-eight federally recognized tribes in Washington, plus four others that are based elsewhere but have land in the state, are receiving at least $750,000 each.

The Legislature made the $52 million available in the 2023-25 budget, and the Commerce Department worked with the tribes to figure out how they wanted to use the money. For the Skokomish Tribe north of Olympia, it's $2 million to weatherize homes.

wheelchair access, said Thomas Brown, commissioner of the Cortland County Board of Elections. Accessible parking spaces and bright lighting are more requirements.

Brown said voting places' accessibility gets audited, and possible sites are regularly surveyed.

"Obviously that will limit the places we can make use of," Brown said Monday.

If a potential site has surmountable barriers, state and federal funds are available to make it accessible, he said.

"It's an ongoing effort to make sure people have the opportunity to vote when they want to," Brown said.

The Cortland Common Council recently approved a temporary, part-time safety coordinator position to conduct a short-term review of "safety and ADA functions within the city."

"We want to do an audit review of all our current processes," Mayor Scott Steve said during a July 2 council meeting, when the council approved the position. The coordinator will review how safe and easy it is to enter city buildings, for example.

The city's ongoing facelift has raised, and sometimes dug, temporary barriers to getting around, especially downtown. Mikowski said Access works to create ways people can navigate the construction.

"When we get complaints, staff do walk-throughs and give feedback," Mikowski said.

However, Mikowski said some city businesses don't want to work with Access to Independence to make their properties accessible, but the agency is now working with three businesses to improve accessibility.

"We're a large group with some income, and if you're a retailer or restaurant and your place isn't accessible, you're just ruling out so many people," Mikowski said. "We try to work alongside people instead of being adversarial, helping them see why it's good. Every business wants more customers."

Mikowski said laws and programs designed to help vulnerable groups benefit everyone — a concept known as the curb cut effect. Sidewalk ramps, or curb cuts, were first designed to benefit wheelchair users, but have come to benefit many others. "That's how ATI started, around curb cuts and parking spaces," Mikowski said.

Tax credits and deductions are available for businesses that spend money to make facilities accessible to persons with disabilities, says the state Division of Human Rights.

Finances are one of two major obstacles to wider accessibility, Mikowski said. The other is a lack of understanding.

"People don't often understand disability rights issues until they themselves or someone they love and care about are going through it," she said. "More than the money, it's people understanding something potentially a little thing for them is actually super helpful and motivating for people, employees and the public."

GARNER

where a basketball hoop was set up by a nonprofit with the help of NYPD officers from the agency's community affairs unit.

Garner died after the 2014 confrontation with Pantaleo and other officers who suspected that he was selling loose, untaxed cigarettes on the street. Video showed Pantaleo, who is white, wrapping an arm around the neck of Garner, who was Black, as they struggled and fell to the sidewalk. "I can't breathe," Garner gasped repeatedly, before losing consciousness. He was pronounced dead at a hospital.

Authorities in New York determined that Pantaleo had used a chokehold banned by the New York Police Department in the 1990s, and the city medical examiner's office ruled Garner's death a homicide, but neither state nor federal prosecutors filed criminal charges against Pantaleo or any of the other officers who were present.

"Even if we could prove that Officer Pantaleo's hold of Mr. Garner constituted unreasonable force, we would still have to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Officer Pantaleo acted willfully in violation of the law," Richard Donoghue, then the U.S. attorney in Brooklyn, said in announcing in 2019 that no federal civil rights charges would be brought.

Garner's family settled a lawsuit against New York City for $5.9 million but continued to seek justice in the form of a judicial inquiry into Garner's death in 2021.

The judicial proceeding, which took place virtually because of the pandemic, was held under a provision of the city's charter that lets citizens petition the court for a public inquiry into "any alleged violation or neglect of duty in relation to the property, government or affairs of the city." The purpose of the inquiry was to establish a record rather than to find anyone guilty or innocent.

TRUMP

office. The absence of a satisfactory explanation has led Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas to recount the lengthy federal investigation into the 2017 mass shooting in Las Vegas, the deadliest such attack in the nation's history. That probe closed after 17 months without finding any motive for what drove the 64-year-old gunman to spray more than 1,000 rounds into a crowd of concertgoers other than to "attain a certain degree of infamy."

Crooks, with a slight build and wire-rimmed glasses, went by "Tom." He was described by classmates at Bethel Park High School as smart but standoffish, often seen wearing headphones and preferring to sit alone at lunch looking at his phone. Some said he was often mocked by other students for the clothes he wore, which included hunting outfits, and for continuing to wear a mask after the COVID pandemic was over.

"He was bullied almost every day," said classmate Jason Kohler. "He was just an outcast."

After graduating from high school in 2022, Crooks went on to the Community College of Allegheny County, earning an associate's degree with honors in engineering science in May. He also worked at a nursing home as a dietary aide.

A 1997 Secret Service study into those who had attempted assassinations since 1949 found there was no single indicator that a person might seek to take the life of a public figure. However, two-thirds of all attackers were described as "social isolates."

Like Crooks, few had any history of violent crime or criminal records. Most attackers also had histories of handling weapons, but no formal weapons or military training, according to the study.

As a freshman, Crooks had tried out for his high school rifle team but was rejected for poor marksmanship, the AP previously reported. Through his family, he was a member of the Clairton Sportsmen's Club, a shooting range about 11 miles east of Bethel Park.

"We know very little about him," club president Bill Sellitto told the AP. "That was a terrible, terrible thing that happened Saturday — that's not what we're about by any means."

The club has an outdoor range for high-powered rifles with targets set at distances of up to 187 yards.

Crooks was well within that range when he opened fire on Trump Saturday from about 147 yards from where Trump was speaking, unleashing two quick volleys of rounds at the former president with an AR-15 style rifle.

His father, Matthew Crooks, bought the gun in West Mifflin, Pennsylvania, in 2013 from Gander Mountain, a retail outdoors chain.

The day before the shooting, Thomas Crooks went to the sportsman's club and practiced on the rifle range, according to a federal intelligence briefing obtained by the AP. On the day of the attack, he purchased 50 rounds of 5.56mm ammo for his rifle from a local gun shop and drove alone to Butler, Pennsylvania, the site of the Trump rally.

He parked at a gas station lot about a third of a mile from the event. He wore a gray T-shirt with the logo of a popular YouTube channel dedicated to firearms, camo shorts and a black belt.

Witnesses and law enforcement officials say Crooks walked around for at least a half-hour before climbing onto the roof of a building adjacent to the Butler Farm Show grounds, where Trump was speaking. As spectators screamed for police to respond, Crooks opened fire, letting loose two quick bursts. A Secret Service counter sniper fired back within about 15 seconds, killing Crooks with a shot to the head.

Trump said this week that one bullet clipped his right ear, and that only a last-second turn of his head kept him from potentially being mortally wounded. One of the bullets aimed toward Trump killed 50-year-old firefighter Corey Comperatore, a spectator who was in the bleachers. Two others were seriously wounded.

Without clear insight into what drove Crooks, many on both sides of the American political divide tried to fill the void with their own partisan assumptions, evidence-free speculations and conspiracy theories in the days since the shooting.

Some Republicans have pointed at Democrats for labeling Trump a threat to democracy. Democrats, in turn, pointed to Crooks' GOP registration and to Trump's own long history of provocative rhetoric, including his continued praise of the Jan. 6 rioters.

Access to the Crooks home remained blocked by yellow police tape, with officers keeping watch and preventing reporters from approaching.

Melanie Maxwell, who lives in the neighborhood, was dropping off "Trump 2024" lawn signs at another neighbor's home.

Like the others, she didn't know the Crooks family well. She said she was appalled by the assault and said any security lapses should be fully investigated.

"The hand of God protected President Trump," she said.

Crush earn walk-off win, split doubleheader with Ridgemen

The Cortland Crush fell to the Rochester Ridgemen 7-4 in the first game of a doubleheader but bounced back with a walk-off 9-8 win in the second game Wednesday at Gutchess Lumber Sports Complex. The Crush sit at 14-19-1 on the season.

RIDGEMEN 7, CRUSH 4

Cortland rattled off four runs in the top of the sixth inning, but a fast start from Rochester proved to be too much for the Crush as they could not complete the comeback and lost the first game of a doubleheader.

Rochester led 7-0 through the first five innings and looked like it was going to cruise to a win, but the Crush kept fighting and finally got to Ridgemen starting pitcher Stephen Pearson. Pearson threw five shutout innings prior to the rally from the Crush in the sixth. He finished his day with 5.1 innings pitched and allowed four runs on eight hits and three walks and struck out one.

Ryne McKinney (Capital University) began the sixth inning with a triple, followed by Zach Young (Wells College) reaching on an error. Robby Harrison (Capital University) then hit an RBI single and Matt Doherty (Lyndon State College) hit a two-run triple to cut Rochester's lead to four. Jack Coogan (Molloy College) then hit an RBI single to make it 7-4.

McKinney and Young began the seventh with back-to-back strikeouts, but Carson Molinaroli (Anderson University) walked and Harrison singled to keep the inning alive. Doherty then came to the plate with a chance to keep the rally going, but he lined out to center to end the game.

Rochester scored all seven of its runs in the first three innings, with three coming in the first and two runs in both the second and third inning. Julian Salinas (Salve Regina University) started for Cortland. He tossed two innings and allowed five runs on four hits and two walks and struck out one. Scott Scherrer (Wells College) then threw four innings and allowed two runs on three hits and two walks and struck out four.

Doherty went 2-for-4 with four RBIs, Coogan and Harrison had two hits and an RBI, McKinney had two hits and Zach Masnikoff (Oberlin College) had a hit.

CRUSH 9, RIDGEMEN 8

Cortland bounced back from its loss in game one with a walk-off win in extra innings in the second game. Max Atkinson (Salem International University) delivered the winning hit with an RBI single in the eighth inning.

After a back-and-forth seven innings, the score was tied at seven. Rochester took an 8-7 lead in the top of the eighth, but Cortland had the last opportunity at the plate. After Jack Coogan struck out to leadoff the inning, McKinney hit a triple and Grayson Saltzer (Molloy College) hit an RBI double to tie the game again. Molinaroli and Nick Mahar (SUNY Brockport) then walked, with Mahar's walk being intentional to load the bases with one out. Atkinson then delivered the game-winning single to send the Crush home happy.

Rochester got on the board first earlier in the game with three runs in the top of the second inning off Crush starting pitcher Axibael Sosa (Thomas Jefferson University). Cortland responded with four runs in the bottom of the third.

McKinney hit an RBI single, Molinaroli reached on an error scoring McKinney and then later scored stealing home.

The Crush continued to rally in the fourth with two more runs to take a 6-3 lead, with Masnikoff and Joseph Manesiotis (Gardner-Webb University) both scoring unearned runs.

Joseph Yovino (Elon University) tossed 2.2 scoreless innings of relief while the Crush took the lead and Benjamin Young (Juniata College) allowed one run in one inning of work. Angelo Agro (SUNY Brockport) allowed Rochester to take the lead in the top of the seventh as he allowed four runs on four hits. Mahar delivered the hit that sent the game to extra innings with a one out RBI single in the bottom of the seventh.

Atkinson delivered the big hit and went 4-for-5 at the plate. Mahar went 3-for-3 with two RBIs, McKinney had two hits and an RBI, Saltzer had a hit and an RBI and Masnikoff, Coogan, Young and Manesiotis had a hit.

Olympics

Richardson is out to prove she's better after drug penalty

(AP) — Sha'Carri Richardson set the tone for her own comeback story a year ago when she won the 100-meter U.S. title, then the world championship, and brashly proclaimed: "I'm not back, I'm better."

Now, with a trip to her first Olympics approaching, comes a new question: Can she handle the pressure that is unique to the Olympics?

The 24-year-old favorite in the Olympic 100 meters has been open and honest about her quest to become a more appreciative, mindful version of the person whose positive marijuana test at the 2021 U.S. Olympic trials was her unfortunate introduction to a world that knew little about her.

But in the three years that have encompassed both her stunning fall and her inspiring comeback, she has given few details of what happened. She has dropped clues about the death of her biological mother and the bout with depression.

All of this mystery, turmoil and, ultimately, success have made Richardson larger than life and left her enthusiastic and growing fan base wanting more. Some on social media are keenly into what hairstyle and fingernails she will show off when she runs.

It has also made her more than a mere celebrity sprinter. She is a young, famous, Black woman whose suspension evoked arguments about race, drugs, anti-doping rules and an Olympic ecosystem that is still largely run (and reported on) by older, white men.

"It's not a goal of mine to be known," Richardson said. "But I definitely don't want to be known for one thing."

Paris mayor dips into the Seine to showcase its improved quality

PARIS (AP) — Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo took a dip Wednesday in the Seine River, fulfilling a promise to show that the long-polluted waterway was clean enough to host swimming competitions during the 2024 Olympics as well as part of the opening ceremony, now only nine days away.

Daily water quality tests in early June indicated unsafe levels of E. coli bacteria, followed by recent improvements.

Clad in a wetsuit and goggles, Hidalgo plunged into the river near the imposing-looking City Hall, her office, and the Notre Dame Cathedral.

Gauff seeks gold, Nadal may leave tennis after Olympics

By HOWARD FENDRICH
AP Tennis Writer

PARIS — All the way back when he first discussed the likelihood that 2024 would be his final season as a professional tennis player, Rafael Nadal made sure to refer to the Paris Olympics as "one of the important competitions I would like to be at."

If, indeed, this is his last hurrah, and if, indeed, he does make it to the Summer Games a little more than a year after hip surgery — neither of which is an absolute certainty — it would be fitting that the site of the French Open is also the site of this goodbye.

No event, at least in this sport, defines an athlete's legacy the way the clay-court Grand Slam tournament does for Nadal. And the opposite is true, too, which is why there is a statue of the 38-year-old Spaniard at Roland Garros, the site of a record 14 of his 22 major trophies and where the Olympic tennis matches begin on July 27. Nadal skipped Wimbledon in order to avoid going from clay to grass and back to clay at the Paris Games, where he has been planning to team in doubles with Carlos Alcaraz, the 21-year-old coming off back-to-back major titles at Roland Garros and the All England Club.

And even though the idea that Nadal could add to his gold medals — in singles at Beijing in 2008, and in doubles with Marc López at Rio de Janeiro in 2016 — seems far-fetched, just the sight of him back in Paris will mean a lot to him and his fans.

"My body has been a jungle for two years. You don't know what to expect," said Nadal, who has been able to play only 16 matches since the start of last year, going 8-8, including a first-round loss at the French Open this May. "I wake up one day and I (felt like I had) a snake biting me. Another day, a tiger."

Another popular, and successful, figure in men's tennis whose body has let him down lately, Andy Murray of Britain, says this Olympics will mark his adieu.

The 37-year-old Murray, a three-time Slam champion, is the only athlete with two singles golds in the sport — from London in 2012 and Rio four years later. After having hip replacement surgery in 2019, and various other injuries more recently, he withdrew from singles at Wimbledon because he needed a procedure to remove a cyst from his spine last month.

"It's great that they'll be at the Olympics one last time. Any chance to see those guys on a court again should be celebrated," U.S. coach Bob Bryan said. "They're both working through tough times with injuries, but they're showing that resilience and that will to fight and be on the court."

While Murray and Nadal both own golds, the best of the best in tennis do not always leave an Olympics with the top prizes.

Novak Djokovic of Serbia, for example, will be trying to fill that one gap on his otherwise-impeccable resume, which includes 24 Grand Slam trophies and more weeks at No. 1 in the rankings than anyone.

Also eyeing a first gold will be such stars of the sport as Iga Swiatek of Poland, who has won the French Open four of the past five years, and Coco Gauff of the United States, the reigning U.S. Open champion and runner-up to Swiatek at Roland Garros in 2022.

She missed out on the Tokyo Olympics three years ago because she tested positive for COVID-19 right before she was supposed to travel to Japan.

"I've been trying to put myself in the mindset of just enjoying the experiences," Gauff said, "because you're only going to have your first Olympics once."

As a sport with plenty of prizes on offer nearly every week, and four Grand Slam events per year, tennis does not place the same emphasis on the Olympics as sports such as athletics, gymnastics and swimming do. So some of the most accomplished and high-ranked athletes will be skipping Paris.

That includes Aryna Sabalenka of Belarus, a two-time Australian Open champion who is No. 3 in the world, two-time Wimbledon runner-up Ons Jabeur of Tunisia, and Americans such as Ben Shelton and Frances Tiafoe, who were semifinalists in recent years at the U.S. Open. The year's last Slam starts less than a month after the Olympics end.

"You've got to look big picture. U.S. Open is right there. It's going to be super hot this summer," Tiafoe said.

Workouts at Nationals Park give members of military chance to train in unique setting

By STEPHEN WHYNO
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — Just after 7 a.m. on what turned out to be a record-tying hottest day in the history of the nation's capital, more than 100 members of the U.S. military sprint from station to station to cycle through grueling drills.

The setting is not a military base but rather a baseball stadium. They run stairs and shuttle runs, do pushups in the outfield and toss a tennis ball next to the visiting bullpen at Nationals Park.

It is all part of a high-intensity interval training program the Washington Nationals started in 2022 to give members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Space Force and Coast Guard the chance to come together and use the ballpark for a purpose well beyond 81 Major League home games each season. Base HIIT has already attracted over 750 participants over four sessions this year, growing as it becomes better known in the area for the ability to work out in such a unique setting.

"We thought, 'What are the other parts of a service member's life where we can relate to them and give them an experience they wouldn't get elsewhere?'" Nationals senior VP of community and government engagement Gregory McCarthy told The Associated Press after the most recent workout Tuesday. "We thought it's physical exercise, which is what they have to do as part of their training anyway. We've got this wonderful asset of this gorgeous ballpark, all this grass, but we don't use it on most of the days of the year. So, we talked to our grounds crew and we made it work."

The result of ongoing trial and error over the past couple of years is a 90-minute session that opens with a quick, dynamic warmup. An introductory message plays on the giant outfield video screen from starting pitcher Jake Irvin and All-Star closer Kyle Finnegan: "Welcome to Base HIIT, a one-of-a-kind experience that lets you work out here on the field at Nationals Park."

Then, the active duty, guard and reserve military members run a lap around the warning track while the grounds crew nearby waters the infield. Next up is a series of stations, including the "wheel of death" pushup competition where the winner receives four premium tickets to a Nationals game of their choice.

Everyone who takes part can get a pair of tickets to a game the following week. But that is less of a draw than the camaraderie and the chance to run around on perfectly manicured grass usually reserved exclusively for professional baseball players.

"Nobody was forced out here, so you've got people that chose to be out here, so you're going to have great attitude," said 37-year-old Jose Ramos, a Marine currently serving at Fort Belvoir in northern Virginia. "Participation's going to be high, and everybody just wants to have fun and still get better. We're in the United States military. We need to stay fit, we need to stay ready and stuff like this right here, you can stay ready, stay fit while having fun."

The workout comes to a crescendo in center field when the finalists gather around to see who can do the most push-ups in a row. Surrounded by everyone else chanting and cheering, Ramos comes out on top.

"It was extremely tough — physically tough, but pushing close to 40, mentally tough," said Ramos, who has been with the Marines for nearly two decades. "A lot of the servicemembers out here are a lot younger, so I have to show them that I can keep up."

Younger, but similarly to Ramos, many are first-timers drawn in by the chance to try something new that is not offered in the country.

"I like to work out," said Erwin Montgomery, a 22-year-old serving in the Army. "Seeing this on an MLB field and giving our troops something to do and work out and grind towards is something special to me."

Being on the good side of the draw goes a long way at British Open

By DOUG FERGUSON
AP Golf Writer

TROON, Scotland — Justin Thomas made his British Open debut at Royal Troon eight years ago, and it taught him everything he needs to know about what can make this major so maddening.

It had nothing to do with gorse bushes or pot bunkers. It was about weather and tee times.

"I was in the bad one," Thomas said.

By that he meant the bad side of the draw, and it's part of the charm — or curse — of the Open.

It was fairly benign in the opening round at Royal Troon in 2016, all the way through Friday morning until 30 mph wind and a driving rain made players in the afternoon feel they were on a different course than those who played early.

So severe was the change in weather that the leading 14 players going into the weekend, including Henrik Stenson and Phil Mickelson, came from one side of the draw.

"I've never in my life grinded so hard to finish 50th," Thomas said. "I shot 77 and made the cut by one. The worst part was Saturday and Sunday. The morning was the worst and you couldn't gain any ground."

Summer daylight hours in the U.K. enable players to start off one tee for the entire day. Justin Leonard will hit the opening tee shot today. Sam Horsfield is the last to play.

That allows the weather to play a massive role. That happens elsewhere, but it is more pronounced in links golf. Sometimes the worst of it is in the morning, as in 2008 when Rich Beem and Sandy Lyle walked off Royal Birkdale after nine and 10 holes, respectively.

Dustin Johnson of the United States hits off the 13th tee during a practice round ahead of the British Open Golf Championships at Royal Troon golf club in Troon, Scotland, Wednesday.

The forecast for the start of the 152nd Open is for off-and-on rain during the day with gusts in the 20 mph range early in the afternoon — about the time Rory McIlroy and Jon Rahm are finishing their rounds — and then easing late. And then more gusts Friday afternoon.

It's worth noting the forecast seems to change by the day. No one will really know until they're in the clear, or feeling like they are being blown into the Irish sea.

In recent times, Louis Oosthuizen caught the good side of the draw in St. Andrews. It was relatively calm — McIlroy opened with a 63 in 2010 — and then the wind became so fierce in the afternoon that McIlroy shot 80.

Oosthuizen finished his 65-67 start right before the wind came through. His name stayed atop the leaderboard for 11 hours that day and he led by five when it was over and wound up winning by seven shots. Good golf and a good draw go a long way.

"It's part and parcel of the Open. There's always good draws and bad draws," Tommy Fleetwood said. "Generally if you get unlucky and there is a good side and a bad side, that's wiping out half the field already. The good news is if you're on the good side. That's half of them gone and you only have to beat half the field."

"But that's always been part of the Open and that's the beauty of it," he said. "You have to be ready for whatever the conditions bring, along with the golf course. It's very important to embrace what can happen."

Another memorable example was Saturday at Muirfield in 2002. Tiger Woods had won the Masters and U.S. Open that year, raising possibilities of a calendar Grand Slam. He was two off the lead going into the third round when a storm off the Firth of Forth brought rain and 40 mph gusts. Woods shot 81 — nine others were in the 80s — and there went the Grand Slam.

Even getting the bad end of the draw is not the end of the Open. Pdraig Harrington should serve as inspiration to everyone for what he did in 2008 at Royal Birkdale. He was caught in the raging wind and scrapped his way to a 74.

Harrington went on to win by four shots for his second straight Open title.

Jontay Porter, banned from NBA, denied permission to resume his career in Greece

By TIM REYNOLDS
AP Basketball Writer

A federal judge has denied a request by former NBA player Jontay Porter to be allowed to resume his basketball career in Greece while he is awaiting sentencing for his role in a betting scandal that got him banned from the league.

Porter, in a letter sent by attorney Jeff Jensen on Tuesday, had asked that some conditions of his bond be modified so that he can get his U.S. passport back, be allowed to travel in Europe and to reside in Patras, Greece. Jensen told the court that Porter would play for the Greek club Promitheas BC.

But a court posting Wednesday shows the request was denied by Judge LaShann DeArcy Hall. Jensen declined to comment on the decision.

In his letter to the judge, Jensen had noted that federal prosecutors in Brooklyn had no opposition to the request.

"The proposed modification would allow Mr. Porter to pursue a very fortunate — and quickly diminishing — opportunity to earn income through his primary skillset," Jensen wrote. "Mr. Porter, and more importantly his agent, believe such an opportunity is unlikely to arise again. ... Since being banned from the NBA there have been no other opportunities available to continue his basketball career. Mr. Porter has a limited window to earn an income through professional basketball during his prime earning years as a professional athlete."

Porter, 24, was banned from the NBA after admitting that he helped bettors by intentionally underperforming in games. He pleaded guilty last month to a federal conspiracy crime. He is free on $250,000 bond while awaiting sentencing set on Dec. 18, and prosecutors have estimated that he could be facing a range from just under 3 1/2 years in prison to a little over four years.

Jensen has said Porter "was in over his head due to a gambling addiction." Porter told the court he has undergone inpatient rehab for a gambling problem and remains in therapy, which is being done virtually and wouldn't be affected by a move to Greece, Jensen said. The Greek club also arranged in-person counseling for Porter, and plans called for his mother and mother-in-law to regularly be with Porter and his wife in Greece to provide additional family support. Porter's wife is expecting a baby, Jensen said.

Porter averaged 4.4 points, 3.2 rebounds and 2.3 assists in 26 games, including five starts for Toronto this past season. He also played in 11 games for Memphis in the 2020-21 season.

Porter was banned by NBA Commissioner Adam Silver in April after a league probe found he disclosed confidential information to sports bettors.

‘Shogun’ leads all Emmy nominees with 25 while ‘The Bear’ earns 23

By ANDREW DALTON
AP Entertainment Writer
LOS ANGELES — “The Bear” went on a tear at Wednesday morning’s Emmy nominations with a comedy-series record 23, and “Shogun” led all nominees with 25 in a dominant year across categories for FX.

Nominations for the “The Bear,” up for its second season in which its rag-tag band of sandwich makers tries to create an elite restaurant, included best comedy series and best actor in a comedy series for Jeremy Allen White — both awards it won at January’s strike-delayed ceremony — along with best actress for Ayo Edebiri, who won best supporting actress last time around.

It was also boosted by a bounty of guest acting nominations, including Jamie Lee Curtis and Olivia Colman, two of many Oscar winners who landed nominations.

“Shogun” took full advantage of the absence of last year’s top three nominees — “Succession,” “The White Lotus” and “The Last of Us” — to dominate in drama and give FX, with 93 overall nominations, the kind of strong year often reserved for HBO, which even in this “off” year received 91.

Its nominations included best drama series, best actress in a drama series for Anna Sawai and best actor for Hiroyuki Sanada.

The show shook up the drama race when its makers said in May that despite reaching the end of the story of James Clavell’s novel about political machinations in early 17th century Japan, they would explore making more than one season, shifting the critical darling from the limited series category to the more prestigious drama one.

“True Detective: Night Country” was a bright spot for HBO, which lost “Succession” to retirement and is between seasons on “The White Lotus” and “The Last of Us.”

The show, a semi-spinoff of the “True Detective” franchise, led all limited or anthology series nominees with 19, including a best actress nomination for Jodie Foster for playing a police chief investigating mysterious deaths in the darkness of a north Alaskan winter.

Kali Reis, who plays Foster’s investigating partner and rival on the show and is nominated for best supporting actress in a limited series, joins Lily Gladstone, in the same category for “Under the Bridge,” as the first Indigenous women to get Emmy acting nominations. D’Pharaoh Woon-A-Tai of “Reservation Dogs” becomes the first Indigenous actor to be recognized for lead with his best actor in a comedy nom.

The only previous Indigenous acting nominee, according to Variety, was August Schellenberg, who received an Emmy nomination in 2007 for his performance as Sitting Bull in the HBO TV movie “Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee.”

“True Detective” is expected to vie for the best limited series Emmy with “ Fargo,” which had 15 nominations and gives FX a shot at a triple crown if its favorites win drama and comedy series. Netflix has its own pair of contenders in the category. “Baby Reindeer” became a minor cultural phenomenon and Emmy upstart in recent months. It got 11 nominations, including best actor for star and creator Richard Gadd. “Ripley,” a black-and-white retelling of Patricia Highsmith’s novel “The Talented Mr. Ripley,” got 13 nominations including acting nods for Andrew Scott and Dakota Fanning. The shows along dozens of acknowledgements in craft and comedy special categories, helped Netflix lead all outlets with 107 nominations.

Foster was another of the Academy Award winners to get Emmy nods, along with fellow multiple Oscar winner Meryl Streep, up for best supporting actress in a comedy for “Only Murders in the Building;” reigning best supporting actor winner Robert Downey Jr., up for best supporting actor in a limited series for playing several characters in “The Sympathizer;” and Gary Oldman, up for best actor in a drama series for “Slow Horses.”

“Only Murders,” a perennial Emmy nominee for Hulu with few wins, outdid itself this year with 21, behind only “Shogun” and “The Bear.” Leads Steve Martin and Martin Short were nominated for best actor, and, in her first Emmy nomination as a performer, Selena Gomez got a nod for best actress.

Old Emmy favorites also returned. Jon Hamm, who had one Emmy from 16 previous nominations, most of them for “Mad Men,” got two nominations, one for actor in a limited or anthology series for “ Fargo” and another for supporting actor in a drama for “The Morning Show.” His “Morning Show” castmate Jennifer Aniston is considered by many the favorite to win the best drama actress Emmy to go with the comedy actress trophy she won for “Friends.”

And four-time Emmy winner Tony Shalhoub has a shot at his fifth for reprising his role as Adrian Monk in “Mr. Monk’s Last Case: A Monk Movie.”

Former “Saturday Night Live” and “Bridesmaids” co-stars Kristen Wiig and Maya Rudolph each landed best actress in a comedy noms for Apple TV+ shows about wealthy women: Wiig for “Palm Royale” and Rudolph for “Loot.” Each also were nominated for their returns to host “SNL.”

Getting back to its traditional schedule, the show will be held Sept. 15 at the Peacock Theater in Los Angeles and air on ABC.

Many still-airing shows didn’t fall into this year’s eligibility window of June 2023 through May 2024, whether because of streaming and elite cable calendar quirks or the strikes — including “House of the Dragon,” “Bridgerton,” “Yellowjackets” and “Severance.”

Det. turns vigilante in funny and savage ‘Sugar on the Bones’

Book review

By BRUCE DESILVA
Associated Press

Minnie Polson was in some sort of trouble, so a friend recommended the private eye firm of Hap Collins, his wife Brett, and their pal Leonard Pine. But when they meet, Minnie doesn’t like their attitude, and they don’t like hers.

Hours after they agree to part company, Minnie’s mansion burns to the ground—the fire so intense that the only thing left of Minnie is a blackened arm. At first, the authorities deem it an accident, but Hap and company aren’t so sure.

Feeling a bit guilty that they’d turned her away, and wondering if she’d be alive if they hadn’t, they decide to poke around a little to see what they might turn up. They turn up plenty in “Sugar on the Bones,” Joe R. Lansdale’s 13th thriller featuring the East Texas private eyes.

Hap and his partners are clever, persistent, politically incorrect, heavily armed and capable of extreme violence when threatened or provoked. They also think they’re funny and often are, the humor trending toward irony, wisecracks and sarcasm.

At first, the detectives focus on Minnie’s relatives, some of whom had a lot to gain from the rich woman’s death. However, somebody doesn’t like the private eyes asking questions. Soon, people they interview about the case start turning up dead, and Hap and his partners are targeted for murder.

It turns out that Minnie’s death was a small cog in a massive conspiracy involving a series of hideous crimes. For a time, the private detectives work with a senior police official, but he can’t figure out a legal way to end the carnage. So he tells the detectives he’ll look the other way if they take the bad guys off the board.

“It’s murder. It’s unlawful. It’s vigilante,” Hap says. “And I didn’t want to do it. But I knew I would.”

So Hap and company recruit three old friends who have even fewer compunctions about violence than they do, and they go to war.

The result is what may be the best novel in this fine series.

Tourists take video of the final “volcano eruption” show in front of the Mirage hotel-casino before the casino was closed Wednesday, in Las Vegas.

The iconic Mirage has closed its doors on Las Vegas Strip

By KEN RITTER
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A final blast from The Mirage’s signature volcano marked the passage Wednesday of an aging Las Vegas resort that wowed crowds when it opened in 1989 and went on to revolutionize the casino resort industry and reshape Las Vegas as a tourist destination.

“What would The Mirage be without one last volcano eruption?” asked Joe Lupo, property president of The Mirage, as he ended a closing ceremony that drew hundreds of onlookers, including many of the 127 employees who’ve been at the 3,044-room resort from the beginning.

“It’s sad to see it go,” Jessica Hock, a Las Vegas resident who said her mother worked at The Mirage when it first opened, told the Las Vegas Sun during a Sunday night visit ahead of Wednesday’s ceremony. She said she’d miss many things about the resort, including its lush tropical forest beneath the domed glass atrium and a faint piña colada scent in the air.

Jim Allen, head of the property’s new owner, Florida-based Hard Rock International and Seminole Gaming, said Wednesday that work would “literally start tomorrow” to raze the volcano that rumbled and gushed nightly for nearly 35 years.

Lupo remains the property president following the change of hands. He said the new Hard Rock Las Vegas will open in 2027.

Plans call for a 600-room guitar-shaped hotel that renderings depict with guitar string-like beams spiking into the night sky from a purplish 660-foot tower. Allen promised more details in months to come.

Elaine Wynn, billionaire philanthropist and ex-wife of casino mogul Steve Wynn, who built the property, recalled that two performing tigers belonging to resort headliners Siegfried & Roy were the first “guests” through the door in November 1989. She said the first wave of people stopped, stared and applauded beneath the atrium. The illusionist duo and their tigers performed at The Mirage for 14 years, ending in 2003.

Costing $630 million, The Mirage was no simple gambling hall. It was the world’s largest hotel at the time. Guests were met by two bronze mermaid statues on the way to check in at a desk with a huge shark and fish tank behind it.

It had glitzy shops, celebrity chef restaurants and theater-sized showrooms featuring headliners like Johnny Mathis, Kenny Rogers and Dolly Parton. Later, it became home to The Beatles-themed Cirque du Soleil show “Love,” which ended its 18-year run earlier this month.

“Instead of neon, a garden of dozens of rich Canary Island palm trees and a cool refreshing waterfall,” Steve Wynn recalled in a statement of recollections he released Monday through his Las Vegas attorney, Donald Campbell. Wynn titled it “An Homage to Lady Mirage.” He did not attend Wednesday’s ceremonies.

In his statement, Wynn noted The Mirage was the first new hotel in Las Vegas in several years and opened amid competition from casinos in Atlantic City, New Jersey, and the expansion of tribal gambling in California. He pointed to a decade-long resort building boom that followed, helping make Las Vegas one of the fastest-growing cities in America.

Astrological Forecast

By Magi Helena
Friday, July 19, 2024

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Closure might elude you if a request for commitment remains unanswered. You may want or need more freedom and further exploration of alternatives. Consider spending more time with friends to expand your happiness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You're the director of your life, so take charge and be ready for any challenges. Fairness and understanding may be something to cherish as life has a way of balancing things out when you least expect it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Imagine yourself as a cosmic marathon runner. Once you have set a new goal, getting to the finish line might seem like an endurance race. Accomplishing worthy pursuits can require unflagging determination.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You might be ready for a peaceful sanctuary and tranquil surroundings. Someone close might be more concerned about today's money story while you may be focused on attaining lasting financial prosperity.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get together with those who understand your quirks; the friends who can share bad jokes and reminisce about old movies. Amidst their company, stress may unravel, allowing forgotten pastimes to resurface.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): There is no shame in slow starts or a change in plans. Anyone who genuinely loves you or cares about what could be best for you should understand. This may be a good day to set the record straight or make amends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your tasks aren't going anywhere. Save the professional lingo for the next meeting and consider focusing on connection and togetherness. The next social event and good deals at your favorite store may be ready for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Amid the rush and hustle and bustle, you may find a haven of peace and serenity. Your kindness to those under pressure could leave a lasting impact. Consider taking time to meet up with friends tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be mindful of the difference between desires and needs. Harmony within your inner circle could be restored with little effort. A partner or loved one could inspire you to test out ways to monetize your ideas.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It's always nice to lend a hand, even when the extra demands on your time were not expected. You might find yourself committing to something truly rewarding and fulfilling that brings you joy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Success and dedication can be admirable but don't let it get in the way of enjoying time with people who matter. Learn more about your interests and share what you've learned during conversation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sometimes, meetings may feel a bit dull, but hang in there since you might just meet a new connection. Learning the lesson instead of self-recrimination can restore peace and keep your dreams sweet.

IF JULY 19 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Put your ego to rest as you may benefit from being kinder and more considerate during the next two weeks. Your high energy might be admirable, but you may rush ahead or leap without looking first. You may enjoy a full social calendar or spend more time building a network of contacts who might help to keep you levelheaded in August. Your financial strategies could be successful during the first half of September, when you may be more astute about ways to leverage your assets and negotiate.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Capital One credit company offers $265B benefit plan to appease regulators for planned purchase of Discover

By KEN SWEET
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Capital One said Wednesday it plans to offer $265 billion in lending, investing and philanthropy projects as part of its pending $35 billion merger with Discover Financial. The plan is designed to appease federal bank regulators, who have been initially skeptical of approving the merger, which would create the world's largest credit card company if it goes through.

The five-year, $265 billion community benefit plan consists of several initiatives by Capital

One, including a plan to lend $200 billion to low- and middle-income consumers, $44 billion in community development work and hundreds of millions of dollars to nonprofits, small businesses and minority-owned financial institutions.

Announced back in February, Capital One said it plans to buy and merge with Discover Financial Services, which will create the seventh-largest bank in the country as well as the largest credit card company. Capital One would also acquire Discover's payment network.

The Biden Administration has not weighed in on the Capital One-Discover merger specifically yet, but some of the major bank regulators and Democratic politicians have made public comments that large bank mergers — those over $100 billion like this deal — should be given extra scrutiny. Other non-bank mergers have also received increased scrutiny from the Federal Trade Commission and Department of Justice.

Several community and consumer groups have expressed concern or alarm about the size of the merged company, feeling it might reduce competition, and how much exposure a combined Capital One-Discover has to the credit card market.

Notably, Capital One is including credit card lending as part of its plan. The McLean, Virginia-based company plans to offer $125 billion in credit card loans to low- and middle-income consumers as well as $75 billion in auto lending. Historically banks would offer lending programs to small businesses and mortgages, but Capital One doesn't have a mortgage lending department to do so.

Consumer groups are expected to put heavy pressure on the Biden Administration to make sure the deal is good for consumers as well as shareholders.

"The reason Capital One isn't making any mortgage commitments here has some dark irony: They quit mortgage seven years ago, breaking promises they made the last time they bluffed regulators to get a merger through," said Jesse Van Tol, CEO of the National Community Reinvestment Coalition, a group that often works with banks to develop these community lending programs. NCRC did not work with Capital One on this plan, but has worked with Capital One in the past on similar programs when it had previous mergers.

Capital One said the plan was developed in partnership with the National Association for Latino Community Asset Builders, NeighborWorks America, the Opportunity Finance Network and the Woodstock Institute.

Capital One also pledged not to close any branches as part of the merger, and to continue opening more branches in low-income neighborhoods. The bank promised to keep one third of its branches in low-to-middle income census tracts as well.

The bidding:
East 1♣ South 1♠ West Pass North 2♠
Pass 4♠

Opening lead — five of clubs.
A declarer can sometimes draw amazingly accurate conclusions about the composition of the defenders' hands, even though he cannot actually see their cards. Consider this case where South wound up in four spades after East had opened the bidding with one club. West then led a club, whereupon East took the ace and shifted to his singleton diamond.
West won and returned a diamond, ruffed by East for the defenders' third trick. East exited with a club to dummy's queen, and when declarer next led a trump from dummy, East produced the nine.

It's easy to see, looking at all four hands, that the winning play is to finesse the ten. Declarer then returns to dummy with a heart for a second trump finesse to wrap up the contract.

However, the ten play in effect assumes an original 4-0 division of the trump suit — by no means an obvious assumption to make. Declarer might easily finesse the queen the first time around and finish down one.

In the actual case, South deduced from the information he had picked up from the bidding and play to this point that East had indeed started with the K-J-9-6 of spades, so he finessed the ten and made four spades.

The reasoning behind South's decision was irrefutable. During the play to the first four tricks, East had shown up with a singleton diamond and precisely four clubs.

It followed that East had to have started with four cards in each major suit, since he surely would not have opened one club had he held five hearts and three spades, the only other possibility. East's original distribution thus became marked as 4-4-1-4, so the deep finesse in spades was the only logical play to make.

This New York City vet makes house calls. In 'Pets and the City,' she's penned a memoir full of tails

By LEANNE ITALIE
AP Lifestyles Writer

NEW YORK — As a city kid, Amy Attas had big dreams of roaming the countryside, healing animals a la James Herriot's classic "All Creatures Great and Small."

How did it go? Well, the veterinarian made it from Queens to Manhattan, spending the last 32 years traversing the streets of her hometown as a full-time house call doc.

And, boy, does she have stories to tell, from escaping a massive, ailing and territory-threatened Rottweiler, fangs fully bared, to three weeks on intravenous antibiotics after a nasty bite from a cat patient.

Then there's the humans behaving badly ("No dog of mine will be neutered!") and the pampered celebrity-owned pets, including the beloved dogs of the late Joan Rivers, whom Attas counted as a friend. Cher once bared all to show Attas a rash after she adopted a dog with mange, and Billy Joel serenaded her on piano.

"You'll never guess what happened today," was Attas' nightly refrain to her husband. Now, she's collected those tales into a juicy and compassionate memoir, "Pets and the City," out today.

Woven among her stories are tips and advice for animal lovers.

IN-HOME PET CARE IS NO LONGER A RARITY

The pug-loving Attas had no grand business plan for her City Pets practice when she first packed up supplies and began traveling by subway and taxi. She had just left a tony Upper East Side animal hospital and some of her clients, including Rivers, wanted to keep using her. She assumed the house calls would be temporary.

"When I started, it was a novelty," Attas said. "From day one I was busy."

She has more company now as concierge services in general have grown in popularity. Other vets around the country do it full time like Attas, while some maintain brick-and-mortar practices and provide home services for end-of-life care.

Attas, meanwhile, has graduated to a private car and driver. She starts her days at 8 a.m., accompanied by one or both of her nurses. She allowed The Associated Press to tag along on a recent afternoon.

"I initially thought my practice would be filled with people who had difficulty getting to the veterinarian and maybe older people who had pets, or people with physical disabilities," she said. They do seek her out but, Attas said, "what I didn't realize was how attractive it would be to all kinds of other pet owners."

Meet Puddy, the beloved 19-year-old domestic short hair cat of artist Wendy Beyer. The arthritic black-and-white feline has high blood pressure and requires monthly checks. Beyer found Attas through an online search.

"It's life-changing," Beyer said of having Puddy cared for in the comfort of his own home, a cozy sun- and art-filled apartment in the Hudson Yards neighborhood. "He's never liked being in a carrier. It's so traumatic trying to get him in the carrier myself."

Beyer also likes Attas' no-pressure approach to her decision to let Puddy age naturally without heroic measures.

"I think it's helping to extend his life. He's a really relaxed chill kitty. He's not being stressed out," Beyer said.

Hop on over to Fifth Avenue for a check on Cody, an adorable, barky white Maltese who, at age 8, is a bundle of fun-loving energy. He's at the center of Lisa Healey's life.

Cody has itchy allergies and a heart murmur. Attas, who helped the Healeys bid farewell to a previous dog, regularly sees Cody in the couple's spacious apartment.

"This is our child and we would do anything for our children, so it's worth the cost. It's worth every penny. I don't even think about it," Healey said.

NOT YOUR AVERAGE VET PRACTICE

House calls are a far different beast for vets than regular practices. There's the travel, of course, no small thing in Manhattan. On a recent round, Attas and nurse Jeanine Lutz made use of their in-car time answering phone calls, working on scheduling and tending to the numerous other tasks most vets deal with when they have a few minutes between exams.

"It takes much longer than just waiting for a patient to come in and going from exam room to exam room in a hospital," Attas said.

The cost of her transportation (she's Manhattan-only) is included in the fee. She charges an additional fee for seeing multiple pets at once. It's less than making more than one trip to a vet's office or what other vets may charge for seeing more than one pet on the same day, she said. Attas restricts her practice to dogs and cats.

In all, Attas said her services can be about 30% more than brick-and-mortar practices. She doesn't perform surgery, but she provides typical care, from vaccinations to blood and urine draws, relying on specialists for things like severe heart and eye issues. She uses animal hospitals when large equipment is needed or for acute emergencies when every second counts.

So far, Attas has seen more than 7,000 animals in her travels, including the pets of Joel, Wayne Gretzky, Steve Martin and Kevin Kline. At minimum, she or one of the two other vets in her practice visit 12 to 15 homes daily. Her personal best in terms of animals seen in a day is 23.

Attas and her human clients point to other advantages of house calls. Once clients are established, the humans don't have to be home.

"Sometimes they have their doorman let us in. Sometimes their nanny or their housekeeper is at home. And many of our clients actually give us keys to their apartments," Attas said.

HOUSE CALLS AREN'T JUST FOR THE RICH

Attas dispels the notion that her client list is solely filled with pets of the wealthy.

"I go to billionaires' homes. I go to housing projects. I work with not-for-profits to help seniors continue to live with their pets," she said. "Some of my favorite clients through the years were people who didn't really have a lot, but what they cherished most were their pets."

Attas never wants to be so busy that she loses the intimate value of home visits.

"When you're in the home, you're experiencing how that pet lives," she said. "I can't even think of how many times I have been in someone's home where I see something that is a complete danger for a pet."

That includes potential killers like open windows with no screens, toxic plants and unsecured terraces. She ended one owner's practice of serving up massive quantities of catnip after the cat went seriously loopy.

And she found an unlikely object inside a bull terrier that wasn't coming out the way it went in: His human's giant over-ear headphones. The human wondered where they had gone.

"We couldn't figure out how he even consumed them," Attas said.

She keeps a keen eye on humans who sometimes need help themselves.

"I've seen seniors who have lost pets and lose their will to live. In one particular case that I talk about in the book, a lovely woman's elderly dog passed away, and when I went to check on her a week later she was a fraction of the woman I had seen the week before," Attas said.

Attas brought the grieving 90-year-old client a senior dog to adopt under the guise of fostering.

"She immediately had a reason to live again," Attas said, "and took care of that dog until the day she passed away."

New York state eyes changes to $25B school aid formula

By CAYLA BAMBERGER
New York Daily News (TNS)

New York State could soon overhaul how it allocates education funding to each school district. Researchers kicked off a process Tuesday to rework the state's primary school aid formula, with five public hearings scheduled over the next month in New York City and statewide. The funding stream, known as Foundation Aid, directs $24.9 billion of the $35.9 billion state education package this year to local schools — but is facing mounting criticism that it's outdated and inequitable.

"[Foundation Aid] is often opaque and difficult to understand," said Robert Megna, president of the Rockefeller Institute of Government, SUNY's policy research arm conducting the study. "In other ways, the formulation is also very out of date, using data from early in the current century."

"We are tasked with making recommendations to update and address issues with how the formula functions," he added.

During state budget negotiations, Gov. Hochul tried phasing out a provision of the formula known as "hold harmless" that ensures all school districts receive at least as much per-pupil funding as they did the year before — even if they're registering fewer kids. Both the Senate and Assembly rejected the proposal.

The compromise was a process to study Foundation Aid — a per-pupil formula launched in 2007 to level the playing field for students with more costly needs — and consider revisions.

At Tuesday's hearing, New York City Schools Chancellor David Banks said revisions should increase funding for students in temporary housing and foster care, and recognize the range of costs in educating children with different disabilities. He also suggested the state should recognize the unique needs of the city, including through an updated regional index that accounts for its high costs, plus funds for state-mandated class size requirements.

"We are the only district in the state required to meet a new class size mandate, yet we've received no additional funds to account for it," Banks said. "To reduce class sizes is a worthy goal, but we currently do not have the funding to get to 100% compliance in 2028," when the law will be fully phased in.

Foundation Aid was not fully funded until last fiscal year, and even then, experts warned it was in dire need of an update. The funding stream relies on local poverty metrics from the 2000 Census, while labor estimates baked into the formula have not kept pace with growing costs.

"The Foundation Aid formula must account for the students that are in our schools today — not the students that were in our schools 20 years ago," said Michael Sill, assistant secretary of the United Federation of Teachers.
