BY GEORGE DICKIE

Ronnie Wood; Keith Richards; Mick Jagger and Charlie Watts (from left) are featured in "My Life as a Rolling Stone" premiering Sunday on EPIX.

EPIX's 'My Life as a Rolling Stone'

a revealing look at rock giants

A unique angle and a lot of revealing interviews and footage make "My Life as a Rolling Stone" a must-see for any music fan.

Premiering Sunday, Aug. 7, on EPIX, the four-part documentary series shines a light on each member of The Rolling Stones through a musical lens. So lead singer Mick Jagger, guitarists Keith Richards and Ronnie Wood and the late drummer Charlie Watts each get their own hourlong episode as they reveal their personalities and passions and share memories of 60 years as a member of what many consider to be one of the world's greatest rock bands.

There is also lots of performance video, rarely seen archival footage and interviews with family, friends and peers, an overall mix that producer Sam Anthony ("Jig") thinks will appeal to hardcore Stones fans and newbies alike.

"I think that the thing that people forget about bands, particularly successful bands," he says, "is that they're musicians but they're also personalities. And the really successful bands that we all love are generally made up of very disparate personalities, very different types of people in the same way as a marriage is often made up of two very different people that somehow make something that is greater than the two parts. You know, a band like the Stones who've been together for 60 years, that seems to be the secret ... that they had these personalities and the personalities were all complementary but completely different."

That was certainly the case with Jagger and Richards, childhood friends in the 1950s from the same neighborhood in Dartford, England, who formed a lifelong bond over a shared taste in music, particularly American blues. But while Jagger was outgoing and comfortable interacting with fans and media, Richards was painfully shy, which in part drove him to substance abuse in his younger years, as the series notes.

Their relationship has seen its highs and lows over the years and the series indicates it's never been as strong as it is currently. And their musical sensibilities have largely remained the same, which has led to one of the most successful collaborative relationships in rock history.

"However things are going," Anthony says, "if they can get in the same room as each other, they can look each other in the eye and say, 'This kind of works. We shouldn't kill it.' And the other one is fairly likely to agree because their track record is so great. And they spent a couple of years, really, working very, very, very hard to get established and then that was it. And then they've been megastars ever since.

"So they have a formula and it works and it's a formula that they love, so that's not too bad a thing to have."

It's Chicken Soup for the Soul – and more foodie content for you

The new Crackle streaming service may be called Chicken Soup for the Soul, but its cooking content goes far beyond broths, bisques, chowders and consommés.

That's because among of its thousands of hours of programming (which also include various TV shows, movies and women's lifestyle content) are some original culinary entries featuring some of the most respected names in foodie TV.

Chief among them is Mary Berry, host of the recently premiered "Mary Berry at Home." In four 30-minute episodes, the author of more than 75 books on cooking and baking, including the 2009 best-seller "Baking Bible," gives viewers a crash course in cooking, walking them step by step through the preparation of meals she regularly makes for her own family and showing them how to make gourmet-quality dishes certain to impress guests at their next dinner party.

Another high-profile recent addition to the Chicken Soup roster is "Simply Raymond Blanc." Here in the 10 hourlong episodes Blanc, the Michelin-starred patron chef at Le Manoir aux Quat'Saisons in Oxfordshire, England, shares the secrets of a new collection of achievable yet delicious recipes that can be put together easily and quickly and are guaranteed to bring your guests back for more.

If celebrities in the kitchen are your thing, then "Tia Mowry's Comfort Kitchen" might be for you. As the title implies, comfort food is on the menu in the six 30-minute episodes as the former star of "The Game" and "Sister, Sister" makes her favorite home-cooked recipes, joined by actors Pooch Hall, Wendy Raquel Robinson, Sheryl Lee Ralph, Paige Hurd, Lilly Singh and Coco Jones, as well as her children Cree and Cairo.

Those who like a little travel knowledge with their foodie content might want to check out "Rachel Khoo's Kitchen Notebook: London," which finds the acclaimed chef and food writer back in her hometown and getting reacquainted with the U.K. capital and its formidable culinary scene. So in the 10 half-hour episodes, she'll visit an ice cream lab in North London, attend a supper club in a subway train car and go for a champagne afternoon tea in Mayfair, among other adventures. Oh, and there's plenty of cooking instruction as well.

Also on the other side of the pond is Rachel Allen, host of "Rachel's Coastal Cooking." Here, the celebrity chef travels the coasts of Ireland to participate in the harvesting of such bounties of the sea as lobsters, mussels, oysters, crabs, scallops and all manner of fish and watch as the locals make them into delicious meals. A must for any seafood lover.
