Cracks in the foundation: Public health takes center stage in new documentary

Inspired by the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic and rooted in the history of health-care systems worldwide, PBS's new documentary series, "The Invisible Shield," explores the intricacies of public safety and global health. For the first time, as if by magic, the so-called 'invisible shield' materialized clearly before our eyes. What's more is that when it appeared, we bore witness to all the "cracks in its foundation." Now, four years later, we're left to pick up the pieces and patch those very cracks so that we can once more have protection against the dangers that plague us.

"The Invisible Shield" premieres its first of four parts Tuesday, March 26, on PBS. The remaining three episodes will each air weekly on the network until the finale in late April. Eager documentary lovers, however, can stream all four episodes as of their March 26 release on PBS.org or on the PBS app.

Beginning March 26 with a look back to the Black Death of the 14th century, the first episode, titled "The Old Playbook," shows how "public health has transformed human life, silently protecting us from disease and fatalities" since the 1300s. Diving into the stories behind everything "from quarantines to crosswalks" and "vaccines to modern sanitation," the birth and modernization of public health has made a huge difference in our lives by increasing our life expectancy as a species (especially in the western world) and "[keeping] illness, injury and death at bay" (per PBS).

"The Old Playbook" opens up the rest of the series to an investigation into the COVID-19 pandemic, and why this virus was the one to bring the current system to its knees during one of the most technologically advanced periods in human history.

Taking up the mantle on April 9, the docuseries' second episode, "Follow the Data," speaks to the research driving public health forward. Per the official episode synopsis, "data has been an essential public health tool since at least the 17th century, when cities began regularly recording mortality statistics [and] has guided public health policy since the earliest practices of data collection in the 1800s to identify the spread of disease. ... But with public health authority delegated to the 50 states, forming a national response to the virus proves difficult."

By showcasing a series of unique stories told by those closest to the center of public health, "The Invisible Shield" helps bring understanding to a complex issue that poses a lot of concern for the average global citizen. Punctuated by interviews, archival footage, data and insight from "impressive front-line leaders and global experts," this deep-dive into the past and future of public health is necessary viewing for every adult or young person looking to gain more insight into the world around us while preparing for what is to come.

While discussing the new series, Sylvia Bugg, chief programming executive and general manager of general audience programming at PBS, expressed her desire for the documentary.

"We hope that, as healing is taking place post-pandemic, our audiences will walk away with an even deeper awareness of the function of public health and have greater hope for the future," Bugg said in the news release.

In addition to those on the front lines — such as doctors, nurses, engineers, sanitation service workers, activists and more — former New York City mayor Michael Bloomberg is also weighing in on the conversation.

"Anyone who buckles a seatbelt, eats a meal without trans fats or works in a smoke-free workplace benefits from public health, even if they don't realize it," says Bloomberg, founder of Bloomberg LP and Bloomberg Philanthropies, and WHO global ambassador for noncommunicable diseases and injuries. "Public health policies save and improve millions of lives, but too often, their power is undervalued and misunderstood. This new series shines a much-needed spotlight on public health's extraordinary successes — and the heroes who make them possible, every day."

The city never sleeps, but neither does Manhattan court judge Abby Stone (Melissa Rauch). Daughter of the late, great Harry Stone (Harry Anderson), she does her best to continue her father's legacy, running the courtroom with an iron fist (and a wooden gavel), leaving Dan (John Larroquette), Gurgs (Lauretta) and Olivia (India de Beaufort) to question if Abby will ever find order. The Season 2 finale of "Night Court" debuts Tuesday, March 26, on NBC, with episodes available to stream online, at nbc.com/night-court/episodes

No shirt, no shoes, no service? No problem. A photographer and an engineer are dropped, naked, alone, and without food, in the wilderness of Limpopo, South Africa, where they must survive the next fourteen days without any basic necessities of modern-day life. After ten days without food, however, the duo begins to question if they'll make it to the end, prompting concerns during an all-new episode of "Naked & Afraid," airing Sunday, March 24, on Discovery. Follow the pair's journey from the get-go, with previous episodes available to stream at discovery.com/shows/naked-and-afraid/episodes

Deceptive desserts: Bakers bend reality in new season of 'Is It Cake?'

Following rave reviews and nonstop attention online, the surreal hit baking competition "Is It Cake?" returns with a fresh batch of episodes, as its third season — affectionately dubbed "Is It Cak3?" — debuts Friday, March 29, on Netflix.

In a preview for the season, host Mikey Day ("Saturday Night Live") says: "Season 3 is stacked. There will be thrills, spills and mind-blowing cakes. ... And finally, I may get the answer to the most important question of our time: Is it cake?"

Viewers should prepare for "bigger cakes, higher stakes and even wilder bakes," according to Netflix, as "contestants attempt to fool a new lineup of guest judges with hyper-realistic cakes resembling everyday objects" while a massive prize of over $100,000 hangs on the line.

As the competition grows bigger and the desserts more confoundingly spectacular, "Is It Cake?" has expanded to welcome contestants from across both the U.S. and Canada, with this year's fateful eight consisting of: Kristen Eagles (Woodstock, Ontario); Grace Pak (New York City); Raina Washington (Richmond, Virginia); Timmy Norman (Johnson City, Tennessee); Jujhar Mann (Surrey, British Columbia); Henderson Gonzalez (Orlando, Florida); Julie McAllister (Charleston, South Carolina) and Caitlin Taylor (Bowie, Maryland).

Each week, the bakers must utilize their oddly specific skills to create "illusion cakes" within a tight time-frame, given a theme or object they must replicate in the process. Once completed, the cakes are then presented to a panel of celebrity judges, who face a challenge of their own: with 20 seconds on the clock, they must determine which item in a line of nearly-identical objects (ranging from handbags to hats to hamburgers) is actually cake, and which is its "real-deal" counterpart.

The pressure is on for everyone — including Season 3 celebrity guests, such as Lauren Lapkus ("Good Girls"), Oscar Nunez ("The Office"), Danielle Pinnock ("Ghosts"), Lana Condor ("To All the Boys I've Loved Before," 2018) and Chris Kattan ("A Night at the Roxbury," 1998), among others — as those who fail to trick the panel will face elimination from the game, losing their shot at winning this "dupe dessert" showdown.

From fictional monsters to real-life heroes to creatures of the sea, see what the bakers mimic next in all-new episodes of "Is It Cake?" available to stream Friday, March 29, on Netflix.

BEST INGRID BERGMAN MOVIES

Leslie Howard and Ingrid Bergman as seen in "Intermezzo"

"Intermezzo" (1939): Bergman made her Hollywood debut by re-creating one of her earlier Swedish roles as a pianist who shares a forbidden romance with a famed violinist (Leslie Howard). This version is included in a Turner Classic Movies double-feature salute to Bergman on Sunday, March 24.

"Saratoga Trunk" (1945): Bergman and Gary Cooper reunited as two people with very distinct agendas in attending horse races at upstate New York's famed Saratoga Springs track.

"Joan of Arc" (1948): Bergman excels as the military leader who literally guides her army on faith.

"Under Capricorn" (1949): In another round with Hitchcock, Bergman plays a landowner's (Joseph Cotten) wife reunited with an old friend (Michael Wilding).

"Anastasia" (1956): A superb Bergman plays the object of a scheme to bilk the Bank of England, by having her pose as a long-absent Russian royal.

"Indiscreet" (1958): Reunited with Cary Grant, Bergman plays an actress who falls for a banker even though he's married.

"The Inn of the Sixth Happiness" (1958): Bergman is quite touching as a British missionary in China.

"Cactus Flower" (1969): In this film of a hit play, Bergman has fun — as should viewers — as a receptionist enlisted to help her dentist boss (Walter Matthau) steer his girlfriend (Oscar winner Goldie Hawn) away from marital thoughts.

"Murder on the Orient Express" (1974): Bergman won an Oscar as a missionary who may not be who she seems — which goes for virtually every character in director Sidney Lumet's superbly elegant version of the Agatha Christie mystery.

"Autumn Sonata" (1978): In her last theatrical film, Bergman teamed with another famous Bergman — writer-director (and fellow Sweden native) Ingmar — to play a renowned pianist who has an extremely unsettling family reunion.

Sam Waterston during his time in “Law & Order”

Is another return in ‘Order’ for Sam Waterston?

Q: I know that Sam Waterston has left “Law & Order.” Is there any chance that he might come back for guest appearances as Jack McCoy? – Ken Betts, via e-mail

A: As long as the actor is still available and willing, there’s always a chance. However, if that were to happen, we wouldn’t bet on it being soon, since he’s sure to be respectful of Tony Goldwyn having the time and space to settle in as his successor on the NBC drama.

Waterston himself wanted that sort of leverage when he first joined the show in 1994, which he made clear at the time. He also wanted to be mindful of his “Law & Order” forerunner, Michael Moriarty, whose character Ben Stone preceded McCoy. After he was hired for the series, Waterston didn’t want to address his work there until had a chance to get situated on the program and into the mindset of McCoy. Always known as someone of personal and professional conviction, Waterston would be sure that all the circumstances were right before he re-entered the “Law & Order” universe ... though executive producer Dick Wolf and the show’s other makers undoubtedly would love to have him back in any way, much as they did when the series made its return in 2022.
